Dr. Hammerman earned his bachelors and medical degrees from Washington University in St. Louis. He did his medical training at Barnes Hospital, Massachusetts General Hospital-Harvard and Johns Hopkins National Institutes of Health. In 1977, he joined the faculty of Washington University. Over the years he has held a number of positions at the school including professor, researcher, doctor of medicine and currently Director of Washington University's Renal Division. Another position he previously held was Director of House Staff Training. At the time, many of his colleagues questioned his decision to take on the position; however, doing so allowed him to ensure that indigent patients received quality medical care during their Barnes Hospital stay.

Dr. Hammerman is internationally renowned for research on kidney differentiation, growth and repair, and new strategies for renal and endocrine pancreas organogenesis. During his off time he enjoys jewelry making and writing short stories. He and his wife are the parents of two adult children.
