Parents As Teachers is a national program that offers free parent education program through personal visits and activities for all families that are expecting a child to those with children up to the age of five years old. Research-based neuroscience information enables parents to maximize their child's learning potential.

PAT FAMILIES RECEIVE

- Personal Visits: Parent educators share age-appropriate, child development and parenting information, help parents learn to observe children and address parenting concerns.
- Parent Group Meetings: Parents learn and support each other, observe their children with other children, practice parenting children and share information about parenting issues and child development.
- Screenings: Children's overall development including health, hearing and vision are assessed.
- Resource Network: Families are linked to local community services and resources.

PAT IN UNIVERSITY CITY

- Provides an initial visit and screenings to all families. Additional visits are based upon qualifications such as income, children in the home with special needs, children with very low birth weight, military status and other special circumstances.
- Offers home or center visit options with experienced parent educators.
- Involves families in preschool activities in conjunction with Early Childhood classes to encourage parent/child interaction.
- Gives post-screening support to children and families.
- Prepares students and families for preschool and elementary school experience.
- Encourages early literacy by providing books to participating families.
- Independent evaluations show PAT benefits children throughout their school years.
